of Hamilton-Burlington

SUMMARY

In March, sales and new listings improved over earlier in the year and are consistent with seasonal expectations. However, with 624 sales in the region, levels are still amongst the lowest reported in March in over a decade. While higher lending rates are contributing to some of the declines in sales, there has also been a significant decline in new listings, which limits potential buyers' choices. In March, 928 homes were listed, a 40 per cent decline over last year and nearly 22 per cent lower than long-term trends for the month.

Inventory levels have improved compared to last year's record lows. We have fallen below two months' supply. While conditions are not as tight as last year, they remain comparable to pre-pandemic levels.

After two months of relatively strong monthly price gains, the unadjusted benchmark price in Hamilton eased slightly over the last month to $770,600. Year over year, this represents a decline of 22 per cent. Prices remain comparable to levels seen at the end of 2022 and are well above pre-pandemic levels.

PROPERTY TYPES

Trends across all property types were relatively consistent this month as sales and new listings reported typical seasonal gain over last month despite being below last year's levels. The only exception was apartment condominiums, with new listings much higher than long-term trends. This likely contributed to sales remaining slightly lower than we would typically see in March.

Prices remain lower than last March's record highs across all property types. Row properties have seen unadjusted benchmark prices trend up for three consecutive months reaching $649,900. Meanwhile, detached prices eased slightly to $820,600. Despite the slight ease, detached prices are higher than reported at the start of 2023. Prices for apartment condominiums trended down for the ninth consecutive month to $466,700. Despite the declines, price adjustments have not been as significant for this property type, as year-over-year declines are just under 12 per cent, much lower than the over 23 per cent adjustment reported in the detached sector.

Hamilton Monthly Statistical Report - March 2023

REGIONAL SUMMARY

Despite new listings and sales trending up compared to the first two months of 2023, it did not reflect typical inventory gains across all areas of Hamilton. Dundas, Hamilton West and Hamilton Mountain reported a sales-to-new listings ratio above 70 per cent and saw inventories trend down compared to February. Hamilton Mountain faced the tightest conditions in Hamilton, with only one month of supply. This is still an improvement over the conditions at the same time in 2022.
